Diane Kepley: To some, this would be a dream house; to others, it's a dump. In the real estate industry, homes like this are known as teardowns. The new owners of this house love the location but hated the dated style of the eight-thousand-square-foot dwelling. Dealing with the removal of the house has typically been a job for a demolition team. But with Americans growing ever more conscious of the environment, a new cottage industry has popped up.

Gene Metzger: If we don't come here, or somebody like us, this house just gets torn down, and everything gets thrown away and taken to the landfills.
